SUFFRAGISTS STILL FIGHT

Issue Statement in Which They Declare the Crash of Broken Windows Was Heard Across the Atlantic—Gossip From London

London, May 31.—"The crash of broken windows in London has been heard across the Atlantic with disastrous results," reads an appeal for worldwide "constitutional agitation" for woman suffrage, issued by the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies. The appeal sets forth that many letters of protest against the strenuous militancy of the English sisterhood have poured into headquarters from across the seas.

"The actions of the militants are hurting the cause all over the world," is the burden of these protests, according to the appeal. Most of the protests come from America and the Dominion of Canada—two countries and states where women have already won by patience and tact or where there is now a vigorous campaign along peaceable lines under way. Says the appeal:

"Letters from officials of suffrage societies from America, Europe and our overseas Dominions constantly reach the National Union expressing the strong belief not only of the harm which militancy is doing the cause in England, but also of its disastrous effects abroad. Those women especially who have already won the vote in the colonies express themselves strongly on this question. They won their victory by tact and patience and by a stern refusal to put themselves in the wrong, however great the provocation.

"In respect of methods, with the exception of China, where the movement has been accompanied by acts of violence, the militant movement in Great Britain stands isolated, yet it is inevitable, as the New York press affirms, that the cause in America should suffer from the outrages perpetrated in the name of woman suffrage by British suffragettes.

The crash of broken windows in London has been heard across the Atlantic with disastrous results." Critics and enemies of the house of lords seldom view it in the light of a champion for popular rights, yet there is not a discordant note in the public and editorial praise for its decision providing for "the open court" in divorce cases.

The law, which the lords, as the final court of appeal of the United Kingdom, established, settles two questions of the utmost importance. They are that divorce and nullity cases must be heard publicly, and that a person adjudged guilty of contempt of court may appeal the question of contempt to a higher tribunal. On both points the lords overruled the court of appeals. In the Scott case, which was one to declare a marriage null, the hearing was secret, and Mrs. Scott was afterward adjudged guilty of contempt for circulating a report of the decision among her friends.

The court of appeals, by a vote of four to two, upheld the right of the judge to hold the hearing in camera, and also declared that there could be no appeal from a ruling that a person was in contempt of court. The lords went even further than reversing the lower courts. They decided that the questions were of such importance to the public that the government should pay all the costs Mrs. Scott incurred in fighting the case before the court of appeals and the house of lords.

The tendency of English courts of late years has been toward secrecy in divorce cases, and the order for closed doors was most apt to be made when parties were of high position and thus able to bring influence to bear. The recent suit by the Countess of Yarmouth, formerly Miss Alice Thaw, for the nullification of her marriage was that secretly. In other cases the judges have ordered spectators to leave the court at certain stages of the trial and have ordered the reporters not to mention parts of the evidence. Witnesses also have been instructed to mention people who figured in the testimony only as "X."

Under an act of 1857 three classes of cases may be heard behind closed doors. Those concern the affairs of children who are wards; of lunatics and cases where trade secrets must be discussed. There is also a law empowering judges to order spectators from court when children have to give evidence of a certain nature. But that law specifically states that reporters of newspapers cannot be excluded.

In the trial of several suffragettes recently judges have ordered all women from court. The lords' decision appears to make that impossible. Under it, except for the three classes included in the act of 1857, all hearings must be public. As many subjects of the king as the court room will accommodate have the right to enter and to stay so long as they behave.

A model of the second Drury Lane theatre has been sent to America, where it will be placed in the Columbia university museum among the famous collection of models illustrating the history of the stage. The model is the work of J. P. Maginlin, who recently constructed a representation of the Fortune theatre for Columbia.

It depicts Drury Lane as it was in 1776, when Sheridan, Linely and Ford became the proprietors of the patent. A century before this the theatre had been constructed by Sir Christopher Wren and a century later Robert Adams reconstructed the interior. The stage in the model is set for the scene in the "School for Scandal."
